

Jungle Rules

This is a popular variation where players try to distract each other with any action being permitted short of physical contact. It adds a wild and woolly element to the play.

In this, the cardinal “no contact” rule still applies, but other methods of interference may be devised. Then, such ploys as making the player laugh (or cry or hiccup or jump) can be used. Distracting ideas are limited only by your imagination. Using little tricks, like shouting “Look out, here come the police!” can be exciting, fun and often game winning.

They can also add something to an otherwise dull party!

Good luck!
